Subject: Wastage of water in the locality

Dear Sir,

I would like to inform you that I have noticed a lot of water being wasted in and around my society on a regular basis. At a time when our city is facing a drought like situation, this kind of carelessness should not be overlooked.

The water tank of our society fills around 6PM and overflows for about another hour till the municipal water supply remains on. This happens whenever the water supply is switched on. The people too, leave the taps in their houses flowing without any reason. If they are stopped from doing so, they justify their actions by stating that they receive water only for two hours in a day. Such mindset needs to be changed. They need to be made aware that their actions have a severe impact on the society at large. We the common people can only share merely knowledge with others. This problem can be solved only when someone in authority takes a forceful step towards it.

I therefore request you to look into the matter and take the necessary steps at the earliest so that such actions do not continue and further wastage of water is prevented.

Thanking you,

Yours sincerely,
S. Kumar

Q4.

She heard the knock and she screamed. She had never had a near death experience, but this surely accounted for one. The scenes replayed in her mind. All she could think about was to save her life. She did not dare turn; even if she wanted to she could not. A cold sweat broke out on her brow as she tried to think of the safest hideout in the house. There was no point trying to escape. The house had only one exit. As soon as she felt some life in her feet, she ran with all her might into the bedroom, all this while the knocking continued. There was an eerie silence for a few moments and she almost felt safe again. Suddenly she saw a shadow and the bedroom door opened. The one she did not lock. And then there was a voice, somewhat familiar and strangely amused, "Thriller films are not meant for you dear".

Q11.

While on the sea, the three men in the boat began discussing illnesses and as the discussion grew the possibility of one of them falling fatally ill on their trip was one matter mentioned. This caused all of them to become gloomy. I thought of lighten the mood which was gripping them. He therefore suggested that they should all sing a comic song. George took up the initiative and began singing 'Two lovely black eyes'. Neither he nor his companions noticed that the song he chose also had a sad tone to it. Soon each one of them joined in the singing and the mournful strain grew in strength. Though he was a bad singer, everyone was surprised by the extent of sadness that George could draw out of it through his singing. The song once again weaved a web of gloominess around them and by the time they reached the chorus they could not take any more of the sadness and all of them broke down in bitter sobs. There was no real reason for their sadness apart from the song they sung which drew out the emotions of depression and sorrow within them.
